CONFERENCE DESCRIPTION

Physicians in today's medical world deal with thyroid pathology on a daily basis. It is so common that some estimates show that up to 20% of the population (60,000,000 people) have a thyroid nodule. The diagnosis of thyroid cancer from these nodules is often times complex. The surgical and medical management of these diseases can also be complicated. Parathyroid disease is subtle and not always easily recognized and indications for screening and referral for surgical treatment can be difficult to determine. Finally, adrenal incidentalomas are continuing to rise in number. These tumors present a diagnostic dilemma as new serum and urine tests have changed the way we diagnose these tumors. All of these tumors are endocrine tumors that can produce significant pathophysiology, and often times do so in a silent manner. Some are very common and some are extremely rare. These qualities make endocrine diseases particularly important and interesting for the physicians that treat the patients that have them.

This conference is designed to give a concise synopsis of new advances in management, surgical techniques, and scientific knowledge of endocrine patients. We will review management guidelines for thyroid cancer, primary hyperparathyroidism, and adrenal incidentalomas. Attendees of this CME event will be able to understand the key issues essential for the comprehensive care of patients with thyroid, parathyroid, and adrenal disorders. This knowledge will facilitate timely referral of these patients to centers of excellence where state-of-the-art treatment can be delivered.

LEARNING OBJECTIVES

After attending this educational activity, participants will be able to:

- Identify the most recent changes to the ATA guidelines for the management of thyroid nodules and thyroid cancer;
- Discuss the controversy surrounding central neck lymph node dissection and have a working knowledge of the scientific data that supports both sides of the argument;
- Recognize when to refer patients for surgery and/or genetic counseling;
- Describe the differences in thyroid surgery techniques;
- Discuss the current literature and recommendations for robotic surgery of the thyroid.

Please join us for what promises to be an informative and thought-provoking conference!
